Whether you are hired or promoted often depends on the information learned from an employment background check. A background check can come in many shapes and sizes. It can be as simple as checking your social security number. It may either include a detailed report of your credit and criminal history, or even information collected from interviews of your friends and neighbors about your character and reputation. Whatever the scope of background checks, the FCRA sets strict standards for how employers and background check companies obtain consent and conduct background checks, and what they can do with the information they find. If a background check company like A-Check Global does not meet these standards, the FCRA gives you rights. You may have a complaint if a background check error costs you a job Common Errors in Employee Background Checks: Background Checks are susceptible to errors. Individuals who deal with public and private data about you may make mistakes and computer systems may also not be accurate. Here are some of the most common causes for inaccurate information showing in your report: Wrong or incomplete data in original documents Typing, archiving, and searching Fails on Duplicate Duplicate Computer System Outdated negative information Identity theft Identity error What are my rights to disclosure and background check consent? A summary of your rights under the FCRA You have the right to know whether an employer will use information from a background check against you and an employer cannot obtain background check information without your express written consent. A background check company cannot hand over your information to an employer unless the employer makes sure that: (1) it has clearly and visibly disclosed to you in a separate document that can obtain a background check; (2) you authorized him to obtain background checks; and (3) provide you with prior notice of any adverse action based on any part in the background check report, a copy of the report and a summary of your rights under the FCRA. What if I receive an adverse action notice from an employer after a background check? If an employer takes adverse action against you by denying you a job based partially or completely on information in a background check report, the employer should give you notice about that fact. The adverse action notice should include the company's background check contact information and an explanation of your rights to challenge the report. Can criminal convictions appear on my background check after seven years? Yes, but a background check company should take reasonable steps to ensure that your report is as accurate as possible. The FCRA also places limits on the negative information that a tenant screening report may include. A report cannot list civil actions, sentences, prison records, tax liabilities paid, bills in collection, or most other negative information after 7 years, or bankruptcies after 10 years. You can't list defunct convictions either. However, criminal or criminal convictions that are recorded and accurate may remain on your background check indefinitely. Can I dispute a false provision in my background check report? If you don't get a job because of information in a background check report, you're entitled to a copy of the report. You also have the right to challenge the report if it has errors or include information that it should not. If you dispute a report, the background check company should investigate and correct any errors within 30 days. We'll clean up the mistakes and give you the compensation you deserve, I'll let that happen again. It's no cost to you. Can I process A-Check Global if my background report includes errors? If you lost a job or promotion because an A-Check Global background check report included inaccurate information illegal, you may be able to sue in federal court. If you sue and win, you may be entitled to your actual damages or legal damages up to $1,000 plus punitive damages, attorneys' fees and costs. Actual Complaints Working people like you who missed job opportunities due to an inaccurate or unfair employment background check report from A-Check Global have already sued the company for FCRA violations. Justia Justia at least 11 federal civil lawsuits against A-Check, including cases alleging FCRA violations due to improper employment screening reports. For example, on October 21, 2017, a consumer sued A-Check America, Inc. d/b/a A-Check Global in the Federal District court for the Northern District of Georgia for violating the FCRA in connection with an employment background check and that he lost job opportunities and suffered emotional distress, reputational damage and other damages. The whistleblower claimed that he applied for a job with Delta, subject to a background check. A-Check Global prepared the background check, but failed to use reasonable procedures to ensure the maximum possible accuracy of the report, as the FCRA requires. According to the whistleblower, A-Check falsely listed a criminal conviction in the whistleblower's report when, in fact, he had never been convicted of a crime. Delta refused to hire him and told him it was due to the information in the inaccurate background check report. This is just one of FCRA's federal lawsuits filed against A-Check Global. Most of these lawsuits allege that they did not take reasonable steps to verify criminal background information and, as a result, falsely labeled whistleblowers as convicted criminals and made them miss job opportunities. Some whistleblowers have filed their actions as class action complaints on behalf of themselves and people who are similarly situated. Actual Complaints Listed on the BBB Hello website, I was recently asked to use the Global A-Check located at * * Park Drive  California  USA for a job background check before starting a new position. In the near future, I'll start a position in Depew, NY, for my luck. To be cleared to start this new position I had to comply with all the information requested by A-Check Global as they conducted my background check and reported the information to the agency. When I completed the online background information that was required by A-Check Global, I was asked to provide my employment history, which I had no problem completing. When completing this part, there was a box that said DO NOT CONTACT THIS EMPLOYER at every employer I listed. For some of the employers I listed in my employment history, I checked this box. In doing so, I asked A-Check not to contact these employers and even noticed at the end of the document that if they needed something of mine in relation to these employers, to contact me and I would be more than happy to provide them with the information they needed. Well, I came to find out that even though I asked them not to contact these employers, they did and several times because they weren't getting answers from them. They used my information in a way that I asked them not to. They also asked for copies of paystubs and/or W-2 that I was uncomfortable sending, but didn't feel I had choice because I'm am excited to have been chosen for this new position and wanted to make sure that everything was clean for me to start in this new position. Also, they contacted my references by phone and everyday email without actually giving my references a chance to respond. When I completed the reference part of the online paperwork, I asked that the references be contacted by email and not by phone in order to give them a chance to respond, but they were contacted by phone and email EVERYDAY. So they sent an email and called each of my references EVERY DAY. They were reluctant to understand that my references were located at EST and that A-Check Global was working on pst. The time difference I'm sure played a role in delayed your referral to me. I also asked them to allow references to respond to them because my references were busy with their own work and would respond as soon as possible. Now I'm complete with the process with them, but I'm very nervous about the personal information they have of mine. If they contacted the employers I didn't ask them too, who should say that they won't do something with my personal information that they shouldn't do. I wanted to make sure to talk to someone about it, just in case in the future I find problems caused by A-Check Global, I have this in writing for someone who can expect to help. This was the worst experience I've ever had with a background check and I'll ask you to use a different company if I need to complete another one. I am very uncomfortable with the personal information they have mine as it is very confidential and if used incorrectly can cause me a lot of problems.
